In order for English Language Learners to be successful in our schools, their academic, linguistic, and cultural needs must be met. Some instructional strategies for ELLs are helpful across the curriculum, but what about content-specific learning? In this full-day session, participants explore some basic tenets of second language acquisition then spend most of the day examining and applying instructional strategies for ELLs specific to the discipline. Facilitators of the session include an English as a New Language specialist and a disciplinary specialist. Participants should bring plans for a recently completed lesson and for an upcoming lesson to use during the session work time.
